Aveiro itself

The city of Aveiro dates back to the 10th Century (at least). Its name derives from the Latin Aviarium, which literally means “the gathering place of birds”. The Moors invaded and occupied it until the 11th century, after which it became a very popular city among Portuguese royalty.

Aveiro is called “The Portuguese Venice”, because of its water canals and traditional boats (moliceiros) that resemble the Italian city Venice.

The city is well known in Portugal for its traditional sweet, “ovos moles”, made of egg yolk and sugar. Its convenient location near the Portuguese coast, just an hour away from Oporto and two hours from Lisbon (by train), makes it a very nice city to live in.

Aveiro has a good nightlife with most of its bars and clubs situated in the main square, called Praça do Peixe (fish market/square) but a couple of other nice spots spread around the city.
